"This pilot program will provide transparency, accountability, and protection for both the police officers and those they serve, while reducing financial losses for the city."

Mayor Bill de Blasio and Public Advocate Letitia James' statement after the NYPD announced that they are going to equip 60 NYPD officers with body cameras.

More than 50,000 kids started pre-K classes

New York City. The first students in the mayor's signature campaign issue began school on Thursday.

Mayor Bill de Blasio visited pre-schools in the city's five boroughs Thursday morning on the first day of the school year, and the first day of universal pre-K in the city.

According to the mayor's office, 51,500 4-year-olds were registered for pre-K programs. Over the next two years, de Blasio hopes to provide pre-K to the approximately 73,000 eligible children across the city.

"This is a monumental moment in the lives of tens of thousands of children and their families," de Blasio said. "We fought and we pushed so hard because we believed our families could not and should not wait."

The mayor's first stop was Inner Force Tots in Brooklyn, where he sat with children linking plastic fish together and asked about the projects that they were working on, according to a pool reporter. One parent, Wendy Alexander, told de Blasio universal pre-K "means the world" to her. Additional school stops for the mayor, Schools Chancellor Carmen Farina and other elected officials were Sacred Heart and Marsh Avenue Expeditionary Learning School on Staten Island, P.S. 69 in the Bronx, Sweet Home Children's School in Queens and Amber Charter School in East Harlem. The mayor's office said Thursday there are a total of 1,655 public schools and early childhood centers providing pre-K.

Campaign promise

De Blasio ran for office with universal pre-K as one of his main promises.

51.5K

About 51,500 4-year-olds were registered for the first year of the program in city.

73K

The city would like to see that number rise to 73,000 in the next two years.

NYC. Fast-food staff arrested after striking

More than 30 fast-food workers were arrested in New York City on Thursday after walking out of their jobs and striking at two McDonald's locations in Manhattan.

Protesters who work for franchises such as McDonald's, Wendy's, Burger King, KFC, Domino's and Papa John's rallied outside McDonald's at 220 W. 42nd Street in the morning, then later at McDonald's 946 8th Ave. location, demanding a $15 minimum wage and right to unionize.

A spokeswoman representing fast-food workers said those who were arrested by police were practicing civil disobedience by sitting down in the middle of the street.

Fast-food workers were on strike across the country, and workers in Detroit, Chicago, Little Rock and Las Vegas were arrested as well.

City and state officials, including Public Advocate Letitia James, attended rallies, as did clergy.

The New York fast-food workers were joined by St. Louis workers who traveled to the city, due to the events in Ferguson.

Attorney General Eric Schneiderman released a statement Thursday morning supporting the fast-food workers asking for higher pay.

"It is time to say unequivocally that nobody who works 40 hours a week should have to live in poverty," Schneiderman said, adding his office will continue to "stand up for worker's rights."

Late-night G train suspended next week for more repairs

The G train just got back to full service this week, but it will undergo some late-night work next week.

G train / BESS ADLER, METRO

G train service between Bedford-Nostrand avenues and Church Avenue will be suspended from 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. for four nights.

The MTA said Thursday the trains will be suspended starting Monday, Sept. 8 through the early morning of Friday, Sept. 12 for repairs.

Free shuttle buses will take riders between Bedford-Nostrand avenues and the F station at Jay Street/MetroTech. The F train will be stopping at Classon Avenue, Clinton-Washington avenues, Fulton Street and Hoyt-Schermerhorn streets.

The closures are part of the MTA's Fastrack program, which suspends services for four nights to allow a greater number of workers to maintain the MTA's tunnels, stations and tracks.

Bloomberg returns as head of company

Manhattan. The former mayor is taking over the reigns of his old company.

Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg will return as head of Bloomberg

LP, the data and financial news company he founded in 1981, replacing Daniel Doctoroff who has decided to step aside, the company said on Wednesday.

The privately held company, in which Bloomberg is the majority shareholder, said Doctoroff would step aside as president and chief executive at year-end.

Bloomberg, whose fortune is estimated at more than $32 billion, had expected to spend much of his time on philanthropic efforts after leaving office in late 2013.

Those efforts have included fights for public health and gun control.

"This is a sad day for me and my company," Bloomberg said in a statement. "I really wanted Dan to stay and continue in his leadership role. But I understand his decision."

Bloomberg, who stepped down as New York mayor last December, added that he "never intended to come back to Bloomberg LP" after 12 years as New York's mayor. REUTERS

Obituary. Joan Rivers, comedy legend, dies in NY at the age of 81

Joan Rivers died Thursday at Mount Sinai Medical Hospital in Manhattan following complications during a routine procedure. She was 81.

Born Joan Alexandra Molinsky, she once shared with Metro that her foray into comedy was fraught with challenges from the very start: "My parents threw me out of the house when I told them I wanted to be a comic, so I had to sleep in my car and shower at the Y."

Rivers' break came in 1965 on "The Tonight Show" with Johnny Carson, who eventually tapped her to be the permanent guest host. Rivers then became the first woman to host her own late-night talk show and later won an Emmy for Outstanding Talk Show Host for "The Joan Rivers Show."

The Tony-nominated actress also wrote 12 best-selling books, appeared in numerous films

"I've been very, very fortunate," Rivers told us in an interview. Visit Metro.us for more exclusive quotes. / ALL PHOTOS BY GETTY IMAGES and was the subject of a critically acclaimed 2010 documentary, "Joan Rivers: A Piece of Work." After she appeared on "Celebrity Apprentice," Metro asked her if she ever thought she was too old to try anything new. Her response? "If you ever meet someone who's still drawing a breath that thinks they're too old to try something new, tell them Joan Rivers thinks you're a f—ing idiot."

TOO SOCIAL IN ELECTION SEASON

Opinion

TOM FOREMAN

POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

CNN=POLITICS

With the mid-term elections rising, PR flacks from left, right and center are flooding my inbox with stories about how good their candidates are, how bad the opposition is and the importance of social media.

This is a runaway theme in D.C. Everyone from the White House down seems obsessed with rounding up Facebook "likes" and retweets with inane messages like, "Share this if you believe in freedom!" Honestly, this faith in the power of social media goes beyond the capital. Even terrorists seem convinced if they can just "friend" enough followers, their cause is all but won. I imagine them huddled around their smartphones: "Look how nice the cave looks on Instagram!"

Social media outlets have become critical to spreading news, starting movements and sharing stolen pictures of naked celebrities. And yet the wheat-to-chaff ratio is surprisingly weak. Sure, once in a while I'll get a meaningful report on someone's performance in office, but usually I just get spurious diatribes about alleged scandals ... or a video of a dog playing the bagpipes.

I can't do anything about this nonsense, but I'm taking precautions against helping it spread. I'm limiting my cyber-presence, easing up on the retweeting unless I am sure of the source and cutting back on the number of folks I'm subjecting to my social media stream.

My personal Facebook friend count stands at a tidy 600. How I let so many onto the list remains a mystery. When I ask my wife she will only say, "Hot Saturday night and a bottle of schnapps."

Anyway, I think that's enough. Any new requests are being met with this message: "I'm sorry, Tom's Facebook is full. You're encouraged to apply for membership again next year! Meanwhile, please accept our complimentary offer to follow Tom on Yik Yak."

It's working. A colleague just walked in and said, "Is Yik Yak a thing?"

Yeah, it's a thing. Like all the other social media "things" purporting to share "news" this election season, but which ought to be trusted no more than rumors.

Justice Department

Feds will investigate Ferguson police

The U.S. Justice Department announced on Thursday it will launch a civil investigation into the police department in Ferguson, Missouri, where unarmed black teenager Michael Brown was shot and killed by a white policeman last month. The shooting sparked days of sometimes violent protests in Ferguson.

The Justice Department is simultaneously investigating possible criminal charges against the police officer who shot Brown.

Study. Stressful jobs can lead to diabetes even without risk factors

Call centers are a high-demand, low-control environment for workers. / GETTY IMAGES

When it comes to type 2 diabetes, a stressful job can be as risky for your health as a bad diet and no exercise.

A new German study found that even without the classic typical factors for type 2 diabetes — obesity, family history, high blood pressure and cholesterol, inactivity — people working too many hours with little control over their tasks were over 60 percent more likely to develop the disease than unstressed workers.

The findings add to substantial evidence that job strain represents a serious health risk on its own, researchers say.

“What we first suspected was that job strain might be related to lifestyle variables — that people who are under high job strain would smoke or maybe eat unhealthy food more — but this was not the case,” says lead study author Karl-Heinz Ladwig, of the Technical University in Munich. REUTERS

Cortisol

Not a coping problem

Past research has linked highly demanding jobs with low control over how the work is done to heart disease and death, attributed to a mix of physical wear-and-tear from the chronic stress and unhealthy coping behaviors.

In the new study, over 5,000 nondiabetic Germans were followed over 12 years, during which almost 300 cases of type 2 diabetes had developed. The largest proportion (almost 7 percent) came from the high job-strain group, even after controlling for other factors. That suggests stress itself is the culprit, likely due to the hormone cortisol which can alter how blood sugar is regulated.

Still being 'DeMented'

Retrospective. John Waters fires off quips as he talks about Lincoln Center's first-ever complete retro of his crazy films.

Once upon a time, John Waters made people angry. Today he's a Broadway legend, he does spoken word shows, he regularly files time as a raconteur and even had a best-selling book this summer ("Carsick: John Waters Hitchhikes Across America"). A complete retrospective showing of his films — the first in the U.S. — should change that. It starts Friday at the Film Society of Lincoln Center, ranging from more recent classics like "Cecil B. DeMented" to such shocking nasties as "Pink Flamingos," "Female Trouble" and "Desperate Living," which once played this city in crazier times.

New York City's underground and midnight movie circuit was pretty late to screen your films.
I didn't really show any of my films till after "Pink Flamingos" became a hit at the Elgin Theater. Certainly New York has made up for it, because that played there forever. In the beginning, the underground New York scene was completely New York-based. They were kind of snobby about it. If you weren't in that school, basically you weren't really doing anything.

How often did you come up here from Baltimore to see movies?

I always came. I had a girlfriend — it was that long ago — and we would make up fake sorority weekend permission slips for our parents to sign. We'd go to New York on the Greyhound Bus. I pierced my ear once on the Greyhound Bus and blood was shooting out everywhere. And at underground movie houses, people were taken away in paddywagons seeing these movies. The screenings were raided. It was so exciting. It's much better than stadium seating. Being taken away in a paddywagon from a movie — that's going to the movies.

How do you view your very first films, which are screening in this series?

Like juvenilia — like if someone found your diary from when you were 14 and read it. [Laughs] I'm mortified, but I love that they're playing the Lincoln Center, because they only played once in the entire world, and the second time is at the Lincoln Center. That's kind of funny.

You've gained a new, much more wholesome audience with the "Hairspray" and "Cry-Baby" musicals. Were they shocked when they found your old films?
They were in the beginning. But I've made so many other movies. You know what you're getting when you go see a John Waters movie. And I don't make anybody mad anymore! No matter what I say, they just laugh now. Maybe they think I'm senile, I don't know.

Are you sad about that?
No. It's hilarious. Are you kidding? I won!

Up in smoke

An education (sort of)

You actually studied here, at NYU.
I only went to one class. It wasn't NYU's fault. I shouldn't have gone to any school. I knew what I wanted to be. I went to 42nd St. every day, I took LSD, I was not a student.

A very young John Waters
STEVE YEAGER

And they wouldn't have let me make the things I wanted to. No school would have. I'm not against NYU in any way. I'm sort of against them when I walk past the Joseph Weinstein Dormitory, where the scene of my crime happened.

Where you were busted for smoking pot with some students?

It wasn't a bust. The police weren't involved. A security guard caught us and locked us in a room and said, "Don't tell anybody." So I called The Daily News. It was an early use of bad publicity to your own advantage. My parents to this day don't think it was funny.

Top 4. John Waters' most notorious movies

'Eat Your Makeup' (1968)

The setup: Among the three early 8mm shorts screened, this one follows a nanny who likes to kill people with cosmetic products.

Most horrific act: In one gratuitous sidetrack, the Kennedy Assassination is recreated, complete with Waters' most famous star, Divine, playing Jackie O.

'Multiple Maniacs' (1970)

The setup: Waters' first feature with synch sound — "Mondo Trasho" features a soundtrack of novelty songs — hangs with a traveling freak show that likes to rob and even murder their patrons.

Most horrific act: The climax features Divine being violated by a giant lobster.

'Pink Flamingos' (1972)

The setup: Waters' breakthrough was one of the first earthshaking midnight movies; it depicts the filthy battle between two sects of horrible people.

Most horrific act: There are so many, but the coda, in which Divine eats some dog poo, is probably the only one we can mention in print.

'Female Trouble' (1974)

The setup: Divine plays a runaway teen who becomes a thief who becomes a media icon whose shtick is shouting obscenities while jumping around on a trampoline.

Most horrific act: It's not graphic, but one scene has Divine being assaulted by a man also played by Divine — a movie first (and last)!

Ways to look back on 'Forrest Gump'

Visit Metro.us to learn about how the author was almost ripped off.

In 1994, the movies belonged to "Forrest Gump." It was the year's highest-grossing film, and it took home six of the 11 Oscars for which it was nominated, including Best Picture and Best Actor. (It was Tom Hanks' second consecutive win, after "Philadelphia.") But 20 years is a long time, and one era's monster hit is another's dated embarrassment. Now that it's being re-released in theaters, in IMAX for some reason, here are five ways to look at "Gump" two decades down the line. MATT PRIGGE

Forrest Gump (Tom Hanks) is probably talking this poor woman's ear off about chocolates. / PARAMOUNT PICTURES

As the victim of a backlash

By the time the Oscars came in March 1995, there were two kinds of Americans: those who embraced the sweet "Gump," and those who were crazy for the darker, more innovative "Pulp Fiction." "Gump" won the battle over "Fiction," but it lost the war. While it ranks 14th on the Internet Movie Database's user-voted best-ever list, that's nine slots behind "Fiction." Today "Gump" is a critical punching bag — a sign the Oscars always go with the safer choice.

As a conservative beacon

In Winston Groom's novel, Gump is a rougher character: He swears, he has sex. Eric Roth's screenplay sands Gump down; he becomes the embodiment of all that is decent about America, a guy who fights for his country while BFF Jenny embraces hedonistic hippiedom and pays a price. The counterculture is depicted as evil; the SDS guy beats women. It's easy to read "Gump" as portraying that right-wing canard about the failure of the hippies to impact lasting change.

As a bastardization of a novel

There are a lot of changes from Groom's novel, including the look. In the book, Gump is 6-foot-6, 242 pounds; Groom imagined John Goodman for the role. Hanks is a lean 6 feet tall. Book Gump is also an idiot savant, not just an idiot, who becomes a chess champion. Among the many other unfilmed misadventures: going to space, getting imprisoned by cannibals and becoming a stunt man and pro wrestler.

As a pioneering technological achievement

Here's that rare time when a drama, not a sci-fi or action film, had radical special effects. Its main achievement was seamlessly integrating modern actors into archival footage. Tom Hanks mills about with John F. Kennedy, moons Lyndon Johnson and hangs with John Lennon. It's an incredible, unnerving feat. It made manipulating images of movie stars, dead or alive, seem fun and futuristic, not creepy and unsettling.

'The Identical': What the hell is this religious film about Elvis that stars real actors?

• • • • •

Never mind the title; "The Identical" is an original. Blake Rayne — a Web designer making his screen debut — plays Ryan, a man who's actually the super secret twin of a singer who looks like Elvis, sounds (sort of) like Elvis but actually has the much catchier name of Drexel Hemsley (also Rayne).

The lowdown: Being unique doesn't automatically equal being good. This is an almost admirably crazy, low-budget Christian production, one made all the weirder by having somehow attracted actual talented actors. Newbie Rayne is not one of them; he's a wet blanket who fades into the background even when playing the increasingly bejeweled and long-haired (but never fat) Not Quite Elvis. But Ray Liotta, as the fiery preacher who adopted Ryan, brings moments of real pathos, as does Joe Pantoliano, in a rare friendly role.

There's even a germ of a good idea here, tracing what it's like to be the non-famous, unknown brother of a worshipped superstar. "The Identical" just takes it in a bizarre direction, having the also musically gifted Ryan become not another singer, but an Elvis — sorry, Drexel Hemsley — impersonator. For what it's worth, this religious picture isn't particularly preachy, save a gratuitous scene where Liotta launches into a spittle-heavy sermon about defending Israel. It's the nicest trainwreck you may ever see. MATT PRIGGE

Mood piece. Musician Willis Earl Beal goes walking in 'Memphis'

Willis Earl Beal plays a musician struggling to get it together in "Memphis." / CHRIS DAPKINS

Real-life musician Willis Earl Beal plays a nomadic singer who saunters into one of the country's most musical cities, intending to record an album but instead struggling to find his footing.

"Memphis" is a full-on mood piece, lathering its loose plot over a series of disjointed and mesmerizing scenes. But it is about something. Beal's unnamed troubadour radiates the same mystique Robert Johnson once did: It's as if he has talents that come from the supernatural and is ready to create the future of music. Some of this mystique is self-made: He tells someone he considers himself "a wizard." But when it comes time to put his talents on record, or even create music to share with the world, he can't get it together.

How genius manifests itself, emerging from the head and into the real world — how people actually make their ideas happen — is what "Memphis" considers. It rarely articulates this notion, but rather observes as someone who very well could be a master — and Beal himself is an accomplished musician with a new album — struggles to get himself together. Instead, he gets distracted by friends, by lovers, by his own temptations, by his own lack of money, while filmmaker Tim Sutton paints his struggle in mesmerizing, often one-take mini-movies. It's a heartbreaking look at literally staggering genius. MATT PRIGGE

Ways men screw up first dates

Relationships should be equal. But when it comes to dating — especially first dates — things are different. Dating is where men step up and show their interest in someone. But some men either don't know or don't show that they understand or accept this concept: Equality or not, courtship is primal. She wants him to pursue, and he needs something to chase. Here are the most common screw-ups men make on the first date in pursuit of the chase.

1 Using an old profile photo. He might have looked great back in college, but that was 20 years ago. It's not that looks are everything, but they are a part of the courtship/evaluation process; there needs to be a mental and physical connection that will help lead to an emotional connection as you get to know each other.

What she wants: Honesty and sincerity. Maybe he needs to lose a few pounds or has imperfections here and there, but no one is perfect. Keeping things honest is of paramount importance.

2 Talking too much about himself. She wants to get to know him, and she also wants to share what makes her tick, but too often men get caught up in talking about

Up: For couples to thrive in marriage, they need to share at least five times as many positive moments as negative ones, from inside jokes to daily notes. Start your love rituals and stay connected!

Down: Cee-Lo Green really screwed up this week. His definition of "rape" is shared by many people, and it's part of the reason so many women are abused right under society's nose.

their résumés, jobs, incomes and possessions. That ends up creating a one-way conversation instead of sharing and imparting information.

What she wants: Discussion that includes ideas, news, things he's done, things he wants to do and things that hold his interest. Part of that will break the ice, and it will also show what he values, what he thinks and how he spends his time.

3 Taking calls and texts at the table. Answering phone calls and texts in the presence of others is a kind of prioritization. If someone accepts calls or responds to messages, they're implying that those they're with are not as important as the messages they're receiving.

What she wants: If something is important enough to pull him away, he should excuse himself and take the call or deal with the situation. Otherwise, he should put the phone away.

Head online for more on what men should avoid on first dates.

What he's into this week

1 Get to know the real-world signs of someone cheating on you. Look for unusual credit card statements and hotel keys left around.

2 If an ex won't let go, don't pretend they'll go away on their own. You have to watch the signs and act.

iCloud hackers are sex creeps

Re: 'Creepy hackers release creepy naked celeb photos for the Internet's creeps' (Metro, Sept. 2) The problem with the argument in regards to Internet privacy is that it takes away any blame from the morally depraved people who invaded the privacy of the celebrities and basically says, "Well the lock on your diary wasn't good enough so it's your fault I read it." Privacy should be respected, and we should not be blaming the victim(s). It doesn't matter if their password was weak, a good person never would have leaked the photos. They committed an offense on the level of being a sex crime.

AMBER BAUER, VIA EMAIL

Security works best by being smart about it

Re: 'Creepy hackers release creepy naked celeb photos for the Internet's creeps' (Metro, Sept. 2) I compare it to leaving your car unlocked with the keys in the ignition. Of course it's your car, and of course the guy who steals it is a thief, and of course you're the victim. But you're also a dummy. You should know better.

Celebration

Jeter receives honors Sunday

The ceremony to honor Derek Jeter will begin prior to Sunday's game against the Royals at 1 p.m. The team has said fans should be in their seats by noon. The ceremony will feature former teammates, family members and what the Yankees bill as "special guests." The team will wear a patch honoring Jeter beginning Sunday and through the end of the season.

Jeter steps away on his own terms

MLB. The Yankee captain will be honored this weekend as the final weeks of his career commence.

As he enters the final weeks of his illustrious career, Derek Jeter is going out on his own terms.

So while this weekend officially begins the "retirement celebration," Jeter insisted on talking about being focused on getting the Yankees to the playoffs one more time before he begins life as a former ballplayer.

"I want to win. That's it. It doesn't get any more complicated than that," he said. "When you're playing, you want to win. That's the mindset I've always had, that's the mindset I'll have until my last game. I enjoy competing, and when you compete, you want to win. That's the last thing I want to do."

Hall of Famers have different ways of going out, and when he made the announcement in February, he knew it was time, especially after repeated injuries in 2013 made coming to the ballpark feel like a chore.

"I think you just realize it," Jeter said. "I don't know if there's necessarily a magic formula that tells you it's time to retire. I just felt like this

Unsurprisingly, Jeter would rather talk about a playoff chase than his final games. / GETTY IMAGES

By the numbers

6

Jeter will finish his career sixth on the all-time hits list. But he has played fewer seasons than anyone in the top 16.

was the right time for me. I've done it long enough, I look forward to doing other things, so I decided this was going to be my last year."

Even if Jeter finishes this season well below his .310 career batting average, his last year is going better than some other

10

Jeter will most likely end up No. 10 in runs scored in MLB history. And he'll pass teammate Alex Rodriguez (just three ahead) in doing so.

Yankee greats.

Babe Ruth finished his career in Boston, Mickey Mantle languished for seasons as a shell of his former self and Yogi Berra was released after 1963.

The Yankees have retired every single-digit number besides Jeter's No. 2.

7

Jeter passed Robin Yount for seventh all-time in at-bats. He'll finish there, one spot behind Eddie Murray.

And while that may or may not happen Sunday — the Yankees deny it — you can bet it'll be done how Jeter wants it.

Never a bad word

Big Papi reflects on decade-long rivalry playing against Jeter

David Ortiz gets booed before every at-bat at Yankee Stadium for being on the Red Sox. It has been that way for the last decade, ever since Ortiz emerged as a Yankee killer.

But even with Yankee fans' contempt for the slugger, Ortiz shares their reverence for Jeter.

"For me, of course, he stands for the New York Yankees," Ortiz said before Jeter opened his final home series with the Red Sox on Tuesday. "He's one of the greatest of all time. It's definitely going to be different not seeing No. 2 on the field."

Ortiz said he has never heard a negative comment about Jeter in his 18 seasons in baseball. The two often joke around when Ortiz is on second base.

"Winning takes him to another level," Ortiz said earlier this season. "He's a winner, plus he's a really good human being." LARRY FLEISHER ORTIZ AND JETER WERE TEAMMATES IN SEVEN ALL-STAR GAMES.

- 1 An exuberant Jeter pops champagne on his first American League Championship in 1996.
- 2 Jeter will always be remembered for his dive into the stands on July 1, 2004. The bruises told the story for weeks.
- 3 With the playoffs looking like an increasingly long shot in 2014, Jeter's last World Series title came in 2009 over the Phillies.
- 4 Jeter's first World Series appearance came in 1996 against the Braves. The Yankees would win in six games, with Jeter going 5-for-20 with five runs scored in the series.
- 5 The 2013 season ended up being a total loss for Jeter after he injured himself against the Tigers in the 2012 ALCS. It appears as though him being carried off the field in this game will be his last playoff moment.
- 6 Jeter saluted the crowd on July 9, 2011 when he hit a home run to pick up his 3,000th hit in dramatic fashion.

US Open. Williams remains as heavy favorite to win in Flushing

Despite her struggles in the three previous Grand Slams of 2014, Serena Williams remains the queen of Queens and the U.S. Open is hers to lose.

The No. 1 seed and two-time defending champion will take a 19-match winning streak in Flushing Meadows into Friday's semifinal meeting with No. 17 Ekaterina Makarova of Russia.

Fan favorite Caroline Wozniacki of Denmark, the highest remaining seed after Williams at No. 10, meets unseeded Peng Shuai of China in the other semifinal.

"For me it's just about every day is a new day," Williams said after dispatching Flavia Pennetta, 6-3, 6-2, Wednesday night in the quarterfinals. "You never know. Especially for me this year, you never know what can happen. I take everything very seriously as it comes."

Williams is 3-1 all-time against the left-hander Makarova, who got to the Final Four by taking out Canadian sensation

A U.S. Open win would give Williams her 18th major — tied with Chris Evert and Martina Navratilova.

Eugenie Bouchard in the fourth round and two-time finalist Victoria Azarenka in the quarters.

"Makarova moves well," Williams said. "She doesn't care who she plays, she gives 100 percent. Those types of players are often difficult to play because it makes them better."

Makarova lost to Williams here two years ago, but owns a victory over Williams in the 2012 Australian Open. ADAM ZAGORIA

3 Stories to watch as Jets face the Raiders

NFL. The Jets are ready to kick off the 2014 season on Sunday against Oakland — and its rookie QB.

It is, as the team's slogan once said, "go time" for the New York Jets.

"As much as you love training camp and everything else ... there is just something special about opening a season," head coach Rex Ryan said.

Metro looks at three things to watch as the Jets open the season with Oakland on Sunday at MetLife Stadium (1 p.m., CBS).

KRISTIAN DYER
@KristianRDyer

Get to the Carr

Local fans will remember Raiders rookie quarterback Derek Carr for leading Fresno State to a 52-51 win over Rutgers last season.

The gunslinger threw for over 450 yards and had five touchdowns and an interception. Carr is accurate and can certainly throw the ball, but in his first start in the NFL he will never have faced a pass rush quite like the Jets. The front seven is arguably the best in the league and they will mix things up.

"We feel good about Derek Carr," Raiders head coach Dennis Allen said this week. "He's really mature beyond his age as far as a young quarterback in this league."

DEREK CARR WAS THE NO. 36 OVERALL PICK IN LAST YEAR'S DRAFT AND BEAT MATT SCHAUB FOR THE WEEK 1 START.

GETTY IMAGES

Corner issue

Dee Milliner isn't going to play in this game, making a cornerback corps that is already weak all the more paper thin. The good news is the Raiders' passing offense likely won't be very good, meaning the secondary may not be tested too much.

Former safety Antonio Allen will likely get the nod on one side opposite Darrin Walls. Walls has had a pretty good preseason but has lacked consistency throughout his career.

Tuck rule

While the Raiders didn't have a great offseason, they did bolster their offensive line with former Jets right tackle Austin Howard, who they then puzzlingly moved to guard.

But on the other side of the ball, their defensive line got a nice pickup with former Giants defensive end Justin Tuck. The 31-year-old still has it, as evidenced by his 11 sacks last season.

"I think the biggest thing that kind of gets overlooked a little bit is that Justin Tuck can still play at a high level, and he did that throughout the pre-season," Allen said.

Giants have extra time to prepare

The Giants will take the first Sunday of the season off while they prepare for a Monday night opener in Detroit (7 p.m., ESPN). But Tom Coughlin and his staff have been researching the Lions' new coaching staff for months.

"They have a new coach, Jim Caldwell, at the helm in Detroit and with new coaches, new coordinators, we have spent a lot of time trying to study and predict," Coughlin said.

The 68-year-old Coughlin even joked about the Lions' youthful new staff, saying "Well we looked up their birth dates." METRO
